

5c. Carbon Dioxide and Low Pressure in the Atmosphere

It is to be noted also that atmospheric low pressure systems increase tissue concentrations of carbon dioxide in the body. When the atmospheric pressure is low, oxygen partial pressure in the atmosphere is low. Oxygen saturation of the blood is decreased consequently and carbon dioxide concentrations build up in the tissues. This effect is similar physiologically to a diminution of the Haldane effect.